Dual Tech

Every attack is a skill check, and every hero's check feels different.

Dual Tech is a short JRPG with real-time turn bars. You pick a move, then land it yourself: Brick holds and lets go, Vex reacts, Lumen taps to the beat. Chain two heroes' hits and they fuse into a dual tech.

Three heroes, three feels

The same button plays every hit, so what changes from hero to hero is the skill, not the controls.

Two feels, one combo

Hits build a shared Sync meter. Spend it and two heroes chain their timing hits back to back: Brick charges a slam and Vex fires off the shield (Ricochet slam). Lumen sets the beat and Vex shoots on it (Prism shot). Nail both hits and the combo hits much harder.

Why it's fun

- Decide, then perform. The menu is the strategy, and the hit is a two-second burst of skill.
- Three skills in one party. Patience, reflex and rhythm. You get better at each one, and you have to switch between them on the fly.
- A big payoff. Landing a perfect dual tech is the moment you replay for.
- Short runs. Five fights and a boss in about 20 minutes, then go again for more perfects.

Feels like

Chrono Trigger's dual techs and turn bars, the timed hits from the Mario RPGs, the hero kits of Overwatch, and the one-more-run pull of Slay the Spire.

Play it

A prototype of the boss fight is playable now: Dual Tech prototype.